LIBRARIAN'S PICK OF THE MONTH Our Vietnam Nurses / Annabelle Brayley

From the bestselling author of Bush Nurses and Nurses of the Outback comes this collection of fascinating and moving stories of our heroic nurses in the Vietnam War.

Being a nurse always requires a cool head, steady hand and an open heart. But if you're working in a war zone, the challenges are much harder. Working incredibly long hours and surrounded by chaos and turmoil, these brave nurses and medics were integral to our war effort.

A collection of 15 courageous stories from the Vietnam War from flying with critically wounded Australian soldiers out of turbulent war zones, to being held at gunpoint, the compassion, courage and grace under fire in Our Vietnam Nurses will inspire and astound.

Contact (2009) - Documentary - Rated PG

Thursday 2nd June 2016 at 2:30pm
As part of National Reconciliation Week

While the British and Australian governments were trying to test space rockets, members of the nomadic Indigenous population in the Great Sandy Desert, south of Broome were still living off the land, surviving in extreme conditions.

The group of 20 Martu people were unaware that there was a modern society beyond the 141,000 square miles of desert they called home. They were still living a traditional life ignorant of the fact that their country had been colonised for nearly 200 years.

In 1964, two officers from the Weapons Research Establishment were clearing a barren dump zone where a series of rocket tests were to take place when they came across the area's Indigenous owners.

In this documentary, Yuwali, who was 17 at the time, recalls the Martu's startling first contact and eventual removal from their homeland.

Now 62, she describes with hindsight and humour the terrifying experience of seeing her first whitefella and her first moving car (she thought a rock had come alive).

Her storytelling is powerful and direct and includes eye witness accounts and original footage.

This is a startling piece of history as well as a very human story.

Gary King of "The Executives"

Sunday 5th June at 11:30am
Mount Gambier Library

Sydney based band, The Executives, were a hit in the late 60s/70s with chart tracks such as "My Aim Is To Please", "Sit Down I Think I Still Love You" and "Windy Days".

With fame hitting them from their performances on Bandstand, Don Lane and Skippy the Bush Kangaroo, they had their share of fun and juggling fans, being chased through department stores of capital cities across Australia.

The book documents a musical journey and piece of Australian history, written by Jaesen Jones and will be presented by Gary King, bassist of The Executives.

This is a free community event.
Bookings required for catering purposes.
